

Hello Aspiring Athletes friends and family,

I hope all are in high spirits and working hard in anticipation of the upcoming baseball season. High school practices have begun for many of our Aspiring Athletes' members, and I want to wish them the best of luck in their high school seasons. After they have secured their roster position, I truly hope they continue to press towards their future ambitions; one being collegiate baseball. As many of us have discussed prior to this newsletter; hard work, determination, resilience, character, patience, and having fun are all part of finding success. Just know that we believe in each and every one of our Aspiring Athletes, so get out there and do your best. Most of all believe in your own ability, and let the hard work speak for itself.

This week's newsletter is dedicated to the senior experience. I have gathered some very informative answers to the email surveys that our senior signees filled out. The next page will reflect their individual responses, but also attached is a document that describes the parental feelings experienced when their sons have found success and left home. I hope you enjoy it.

* I am currently reserving times to meet with all of our juniors in the summer of 2010, so please call into the office and schedule your time with me today!!!

Best Regard,

Dominique Rodgers

Email Interview from our 2010 Early Sign Seniors

The following questions were asked:

- #1- How does it feel to sign early?
- #2- How has Aspiring Athletes helped you in your college recruiting process.
- #3- What was the hardest part of signing early?
- #4- What did you find difficult in the recruiting process?
- #5- Do you feel prepared going into your senior year (athletically).
- #6- What advice can you give the upcoming youth guys that will help their journey into collegiate athletics.

Sample of the Responses

#1 – “It feels great to sign early. All of the stress of college is over with and now I can just go out and play baseball. It's nice to know that nearly all my college stuff is done and I don't have to worry about it.”

-Josh Pierce '10

#2 – “Aspiring Athletes and Coach DJ Santiago have had a huge part in my decision, they have been on phones and talked to college coaches getting my name out there and have worked with the college coaches to set up times to come and see me work out up at the new HITS facility.”

-Bobby Seda '10

#3 – “The hardest part of signing early is telling other coaches at different colleges that you chose some other school rather than theirs.”

-Jon Pusateri '10

#4 – “The things I found difficult in the recruiting process were narrowing down my choices, seeing where I fit in to the size and culture of the college, what the pros and cons of each program would present to me, and ultimately making my final choice.”

- Sean Blackburn '10

#6 – “Always believes in yourself and do not let anyone tell you that you're not good enough to achieve your goals. You only need one coach to believe in you to get a chance at your dreams.”

-Thomas McGurk '10

High School Baseball Web*

It seems like only last week that he was a nervous freshman just hoping to make the team.
Now he has started his "Senior Year."

The evolution is almost complete. You have watched him grow from a skinny nervous kid that loved baseball but was not sure about his ability to compete on the high school level..... To a confident "near adult" senior, that is hoping for a state championship this year.

Times have changed.... from Mom or Dad picking him up after practice to having his own car and being embarrassed if he needs to ride with his parents.

You have spent the equivalent of the cost of the finest big screen television / entertainment center on $250.00 bats and gloves, sliding shorts and athletic supporters, under-armor, batting gloves and cleats. And it was worth every penny!

You have endured weather that was better suited for the Iditarod Sled Dog Race than a baseball game. You know where every high school, within a 100 mile radius, is from your house. You have been on "suicide watch" the nights that he went 0 for 4, made a crucial fielding error or had a bad pitching outing.

You have also cherished the nights that he had the game winning hit, went 4 for 4 with 2 doubles, made a spectacular game ending defensive play or was so dominating on the mound that it seemed like he was pitching to a group of "tee-ballers." He has "survived" girlfriends, proms, changing friendships, battles with his parents over shaving the 6 hairs on his chin and the English teacher that never smiles. You have had the discussion about how important good grades are so often that even the dog can recite it "word and verse." They anxiously await through the summer and fall and then through the endless winter for their "Senior Season" to arrive. He has started to learn how important the off-season work can be and has dedicated him to it like no time before. He is READY!

Try-outs come for the rookies. The seniors get their chance to strut, posture and "look good." They finally get first choice of uniforms and numbers. The senior year means that they no longer have to carry equipment or clean-up locker rooms. They are now the "Senior Leadership".....whatever that means.

Two weeks, now five days, then one day until the first scrimmage game. Finally it is here! And it rains.....

Opening Day dawns bright and clear, all is right with the world. As you listen to the National Anthem you realize that he is within 25-30 games of the end of his high school athletic career. You wonder if he has thought about this, just a few weeks until it is over.

For the majority of high school players this is the last organized baseball they will ever play. A few will play one more season with the summer team and a select fortunate few will continue on in college or professional baseball. Before you realize it "Senior Day" is here. You ask one of the younger player's parents to take pictures for you. The senior players and their parents will be introduced before the game. Mom promises not to cry ... Dad is too tough to cry, the dust from the dry infield has made his eyes water!

The game begins and your concentration on the game is not as keen as it normally is. You think back to how cute he looked in his tee ball uniform, many years ago. You remember the team picture where his front teeth were missing -- and so were many of his teammates.

You remember his first high school hit or pitching strike out. All the ups and downs, how you feel like his friends are a part of the family and you treat them the same as your own. You have watched in amazement as these strapping young men, in the final years of being "teenagers," can act like a group of 6 year olds at a Chucky Cheese.

He has made friends that will last a lifetime -- the parents promise to "stay in touch" but it usually doesn't happen. Everyone goes their own way. Hopefully your son has had a relationship with a coach that will remain positive with him for the rest of his life. Every athlete deserves that one special coach in his life.

It has been a wonderful ride and you wouldn't trade it for any amount of money. You hope that your children are as fortunate as you have been.
